Chapter 3 # Creating Zines and Books IN THIS CHAPTER Creating a zine Formatting books Creating and formatting projects Preparing artwork and text In the last decade, zines have exploded in popularity. A zine is a self-published magazine, usually composed of computer printed pages, usually including text and images. Zines are a great way for friends, bands, and others to tell the world about their music, art, sports, and other passions. In this chapter, I share the software you need to create basic zines, and I also discuss software for formatting printed books, those collections of pages that usually comprise a_book_ You need not know computer science to make any of these materials, as you can always hire a friend or professional to complete your project. When working on projects, keep these pointers in mind: * Zines are intended for personal use. For commercial use, make sure your work meets federal, state, and city requirements. If in doubt, check with your local office of federal, state, and city governments. * When using any software, be mindful of the license you purchased and the rules of the software manufacturer. A good way to make sure you're following the rules is to work with a friend who has used the software and knows how to use it. ## Making Zines _Zines_ is the plural form of the word _zine_. In fact, a zine is an abbreviation of the French word _zine_. Zines come in many types: * Peer-to-peer (P2P) zines are computer-printed collections of self-published individual zines that can be read online and downloaded to a computer. * Print-on-demand (POD) zines are collections of digital files that are printed, bound, and shipped to you. * Selection zines are digitally produced _collectors' editions_ — that is, small bound selections of text and photos. * CD-ROM zines (for people with a

Differences in amplification of 32P-labelled human telomeric DNA sequences in Chinese hamster and human cell lines. Spontaneous, semi-stable, high copy number amplification of human telomeric DNA sequences in sublines of three Chinese hamster cell lines (CHO, CHO-DG44, and CHO-DG44.1) has been found. Amplification of selected sequences in CHO-DG44 cells was checked by polymerase chain reaction (PCR) and Southern blot analysis. Telomeric sequences from CHO-DG44 and CHO-DG44.1 cells were found to show amplification levels approximately 10- and approximately 20-fold higher, respectively, than those observed in the parental CHO line. In addition, novel sequences were amplified in these two amplified cell lines. The amplification of telomeric DNA sequences was not correlated with the growth rate in each culture but seemed to be related to passage number. Also, amplification was not detected in the A9, 1B4, or B3 cell lines. Degradation of the aerobic granules in a sequencing batch reactor during start-up. Five laboratory scale SBRs were operated for about 250 days using aerobic granules for treating the synthetic wastewater of chemical industry. Initially, the start-up phase for each SBR was 1 week. During the operation the air supply was maintained at a concentration of 0.16 vvm and the temperature was maintained constant. The organic loading rate (OLR) of 0.75 g-COD/L.d was found to be sufficient for start-up of each SBR. The reactor performance was satisfactory during the start-up phase. However, the granule structure was practically not formed during the start-up. The sludge volume index (SVI) of the reactors increased from 55-67 g/L to about 90 g/L with decreasing COD removal from 87-88% to about 75%. From the respirometric study, reduction in microbial activity occurred, with increasing SVI. The biomass yield, however, remained in a high level of 0.40 g-COD/(g-VSS.d). Thymic involution with aging. Thymic involution occurs with aging. It is a morphological and functional phenomenon characterized by decreased cellularity and a progressive atrophy of thymic lobular structures. Congenital thymic hypoplasia is a well-recognized cause of severe T-lymph

Thinka daisies, and rosehip fruits I saw a stage whisper now and again amongst masses of people, repeated peering of groups of friends and acquaintances. "That's like something I'd do..." "That's like something my friend would say..." "That's like something that guy would say." It's a wonderful thing to imagine yourself in the minds of others. They see what you see, and they tell you their ideas about it. And so it gives you a chance to think about your own ideas about your audience and about how you want them to see you. Sometimes it's also good to step back and think about how those other people might be thinking about you. And then you can look for examples of how that person/group might be seeing your ideas. Do they see the same things as you? What? Do they get a contradictory message from you? What is it? We often get caught up in the rush of the day and working without thinking about how the people we are interacting with might be thinking about us. My friend, Matt, and I used to have a good laugh over how we sometimes got caught in that trap. We had these big ideas. We had this vision. And then in the moment of pushing it out as fast as we could, we didn't take the time to think, "wait a minute. Do they see that? Does that get in the way?" The answer, for both of us, was often yes. So we had to take time to think more about what they might have seen, and to take it out when it's a better fit. This is why, in my work, I try to find ways to show my audience how I see them. I try to show what I see of myself in them. For example, I love chocolate. I'll admit it. I like it a lot. It's just one of those things. But it's one of those things that I see in them, which I have a funny way of showing. On the stage, I throw all the chocolate up in the air and gesture wildly for the audience to follow me into my arms. At the most recent performance, I held up two tickets for a show I'm performing in, and I'm
